GOVERNOR WAITE

Will Call an Extra Session of the Colorado Legislature.

He Threatens a Repeal of the Attachment Law and the Passage of a Law Suspending Collections.

DENVER, Col., June 30.—Governor Waite returned to the city last night and announced that he is ready to call an extra session of the legislature immediately to consider the repeal of attachment laws, the passage of a stay law suspending for one or two years the collection of all debts, the passage of a special redemption law and the prohibition of gold clauses in all contracts. The governor is an old man and he was intensely excited, as he declared he would take action at once if there was a public demand, and that he might act without waiting for a demand. The resolutions calling for a session, which came before the real estate exchange this morning provoked red hot discussion and there was an immense attendance of business men.

Fully 5,000 miners are thrown out of work by mines which closed down yesterday, and there will be as many more today. The railroads have issued a general order to agents forbidding the receipt of ore shipments unless payment of freight is secured. Accurate information places the silver ore bullion in the hands of the Omaha and Grant smelter, at 2,000,000 ounces. The drop of 20 cents means $400,000 to the concern. If a special session is held the right of a state to fix the ratio of gold to silver in its local currency will be advocated by some of the fiery spirits and seven state senators seen last night all favor an extra session and a suspension of collections for one year. It is feared unemployed men will flock to Denver and robberies and hold-ups will be frequent.

PITTSBURG, Kas., June 30.—The strike here is assuming a rather exciting form. The representatives of the 5,590 miners now on a strike here had a meeting Wednesday night, and yesterday made a demand on the 800 strip pit miners in this field to stop work. If the strip pits are shut down it will throw 1,500 zinc smelters out of employment.

Excitement was created here yesterday when about 1,000 striking miners marched up the principal streets headed by a brass band, their intention being to stop the surface mining, but action was deferred until the return of President Walters, of the Zinc Mine Workers, who is now in Missouri.

It is feared grave trouble is impending. At the Keith and Perry coal mines at Weir City, the company is fencing in mines No. 6 and 8, and officers are serving notices on the men to vacate their homes at once. Agents are securing men to take the places of the strikers and as the strikers are destitute and desperate, serious trouble is feared.

COLUMBIAN COMMISSIONERS

Will Begin a Continuous Four Months Session Tomorrow.

CHICAGO, June 30.—The World's Columbian commissioners will begin a continuous session of four months tomorrow morning. The session will last until the night the fair closes, unless the government appropriation gives out before that time. In that case the meeting will be brought to a sudden termination. It is probable that this will be the last session but one in which members of the national board will participate. The commission does not legally expire until some time in 1898, and it is expected that congress will vote a small appropriation some time between now and then to enable the members to get together and make a final report of the part they played in the world's fair. This meeting will probably be held about the time the affairs of the exposition company are wound up and when nothing but a memory of the great fair remains.

CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY.

Law and Order Officers Found Guilty at Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, June 30.—At 9:30 o'clock this morning the verdict in the case against ex Agent McClure of the law and order society, Alderman Rope and his constable, Kerscher, charged with conspiracy, was read in the criminal court. The jury found all of the defendants guilty as indicted.

Dynamite in the Court House.

ANDERSON, Ind., June 30.—Great excitement was occasioned here this morning by finding a dynamite bomb on the floor of the county auditor's office. The machine was of copper, globular in form. Why it was placed there and who did it, is a mystery. Auditor Allen was the first to discover it, and he threw it out of the window, but it failed to explode. It was left lying in the court house yard and was viewed by hundreds of curious people.

Sherman's Monument.

ST. LOUIS, June 30.—The movement to secure funds with which to erect a monument in memory of the late Gen. W. T. Sherman has made slow progress. Yesterday at a meeting of the committee having the matter in charge, the chairman was authorized to issue a circular to the Grand Army posts throughout the country calling for contribution to the fund.

Free Delivery at Wabash.

WABASH, Ind., June 30.—Postmaster W. W. Wood has received notice from the postoffice department that the increased revenues of the postoffice here justify an advance in his salary of $100 per year, and from July he will draw $2,000 per annum. Assurance has been given that free delivery will be instituted here in the autumn, the gross revenue for the year ending March 31 having been nearly $11,000.

CHEER AFTER CHEER!

VALETTA, MALTA, June 30.—The British cruisers Edgar and Phaeton, belonging to the Mediterranean squadron, arrived here to-day, having on board the surviving officers and crew of the battleship Victoria, which was sunk off Tripoli, Syria, on June 22, in collision with the battleship Camperdown.

It was believed that the vessel would arrive here to-day and the large crowds gathered everywhere along the water front awaiting their coming into port. Everybody was excited and eager to learn the full particulars of the catastrophe that has resulted in the loss of one of England's best war ships, the death of one of her most valuable officers, vice Admiral Sir George Tryon, and hundreds of the vessel's officers and crew.

As soon as the two cruisers were reported off the port, hundreds of small boats conveying relatives and friends of the survivors, and a number of relatives of those who had lost their lives, put outside the harbor to meet the war ships. The latter came into port slowly, thus allowing the small boats to keep up with them without much difficulty. The survivors crowded along the bulwarks of the cruisers, calling to their friends in the small boats answering as fully as possible the hundreds of questions put to them by everybody within hailing distance.

Every available craft in the harbor was crowded and the bastions of the fortifications were black with people. As the war ships steamed to their anchorage cheer after cheer broke from the crowd on shore and taken up and repeated by those on the cruiser. Business was partially suspended in the city, everybody being intensely anxious to see the men who had escaped and to learn from them if possible everything concerning the frightful disaster. Quite a number of natives of Malta were in the crew of the Victoria and it is known now that ninety Maltese went down with the ship.

FOR TWO LIVES.

Perjury Alleged in the Application for New Murder Trials

At Indianapolis in the Cases of Parker and McAfee, Who are Condemned to Death.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 30.—The attorneys of Parker and McAfee, condemned to death for the assassination of Druggist Eyster, have filed a motion for a new trial. Sixty-two exceptions are taken to the ruling of the court. Objection is also raised to the introduction of evidence relating to the conduct of the prisoners prior to their arrest, in which Patrolman Ward was permitted to testify that Parker drew a knife and tried to cut him in two.

It is also alleged that the court erred in not permitting Detective Thornton to testify that at the time of the arrest the defendants demanded to be taken before Eyster for purposes of identification, or to show that he (Thornton) was twice sent to the jail—once by the police superintendent and afterward by the prosecuting attorney—with a proposition to McAfee that if he would confess and become a witness for the state against Parker his neck would be saved. The affidavits of M. Stanley and John Rednour are submitted. Stanley was a dangerous witness for the state in swearing that he overheard Joshua Munden say to Parker: "You must have had grit to shoot that man Eyster," and that Parker replied, "It did not take much nerve to do him."

Stanley, who is a prisoner, also made affidavit that he was induced to commit perjury by Munden, who held out promises of aid from the court. John Rednour also made affidavit that Munden asked him to corroborate his alleged talk with Parker, and promised him that if he would the court would also be light on him. Rednour also swears that he heard Munden ask Stanley to swear as he did. Claim is made by the defense that new evidence has been found. Dora Simpson and Jose Anderson making affidavit that they saw McAfee on a street car at the time the assassination is shown to have been committed. No argument was made on the motion for a new trial, the court taking it under advisement.

INSANE CONVICTS

Attack Their Fellow Prisoners With Knives—Three Killed and Seven Wounded.

PUEBLA, Mex., June 30.—A terrible tragedy was enacted in the state penitentiary here Wednesday evening. Two convicts, named Cayetano Oliveres and Marcelino Garcia, made an attack upon a number of fellow prisoners in the corridor with shoe knives, killing three of them and wounding seven others. It required the efforts of several guards to overpower the two convicts. They are said to be insane.

TWO NEGROES HUNG

For a Bloody Murder Committed in Maryland.

MARLBORO, Md., June 30.—William Pinkney and Daniel Barber, both colored, were executed today for the murder of Francis N. Bowie, a wealthy farmer of Prince Georges county, Maryland.

On the evening of March 26, last, Pinkney met Bowie and engaged him in a controversy, and knocked him from his horse with a bludgeon, and with several more blows dispatched the unfortunate man. Pinkney then hurried after Barber, and the two put the corpse in a sack and piece of carpet and carried it half a mile to an old well, where they dropped it in water about eight feet deep. They kept the victim's watch, and this afterwards led to their detection and conviction.

On the 25th of June last, through the carelessness of the jail guard, Pinkney escaped and hid in the swamps, but at length tired of being hunted and hoping to divert some of the reward for his capture to his family, he surrendered. Barber protested that he had nothing to do with the actual murder and was corroborated by Pinkney, but it was shown that he had planned such a tragedy and that he had vengeful feelings toward Mr. Bowie, who had had him indicted for stealing meat and he was adjudged equally guilty.

STUDENTS REVOLT.

Trouble in the State Normal School at Terre Haute.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., June 30.—A sensational climax in the Indiana state normal school controversy between the board of trustees and the faculty and 1,000 students sustaining Professor Tompkins, the deposed professor, came last night. The trustees sent their ultimatum and demanded that the entire graduating class sign it before 6 o'clock last evening, disavowing, both individually and collectively, the recent attacks on the trustees and faculty in the matter of Prof. Tompkins' removal. The entire class refused and left. Eighty-four counties of Indiana are represented in this school. The graduating exercises of the class, consisting of sixty-nine, were to have taken place today.

MISSING MAN FOUND.

Ex-Senator Daniel Paul Turns Up in Kansas City.

MOUNT VERNON, Ohio, June 30.—Missing ex-State Senator Daniel Paul, who disappeared some time ago after attending to some legal business, has been found in Kansas City. A telegram has been received by his wife at Centerburg which reads: "Daniel Paul is here; fully identified." Mrs. Paul and Attorney Frank Moore have gone to Kansas City to bring Paul home. He had with him $5,000 in Kansas City school bonds when he disappeared, and was thought to have been murdered. A report was sent out from Monroe Mich., to the effect that his dead body had been found in the lake there, but this proved to be incorrect.

ST. LOUIS DEPOT.

All Trains Will Now Enter the New Union Depot.

ST. LOUIS, June 30.—President Taussig, of the St. Louis Terminal railway and the Eads Bridge company, is authority for the statement that the Eads and Merchants bridges will, in the future, be operated under one management. The new arrangement will thus allow all railroads access to the new union depot. The deal is not a "combine" but is an agreement for joint operation. A new belt line will be built around the city by which through freight will not be compelled to pass through the tunnel as at present.

OHIO PROHIBS.

They Put a Full State Ticket in the Field.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, June 30.—The prohibition state convention nominated the following candidates: Governor, Rev. Gideon P. Macklin, of Germantown; lieutenant governor, S. H. Ellis, of Warren county, treasurer, Abraham Ludlow, of Springfield; attorney general, S. E. Young, of Portage; supreme court judge, J. A. Gallagher, of Bellaire; dairy food commissioner, S. B. Todd, of Wakeman; member of board of public works E. H. Brosius, of Stark county.

GIVEN THE PRIZE.

John Berry, the Fast Riding Cow Boy, Gets $1,000.

CHICAGO, June 30.—John Berry, the cow boy who was the first to arrive at the Wild West show in the great race from Chadron, Neb., was awarded the first prize of $1,000 by the committee last night.

Fire in Chicago.

CHICAGO, June 30.—At 4 o'clock this morning a disastrous fire broke out in Willoughby, Hill & Co's clothing house, at the southeast corner of Madison and Clark streets. The fire originated, it is thought, in the top floor and was discovered by the watchman of the building. The fire looked very dangerous for awhile, but prompt work was done by the firemen, and the loss, caused principally by smoke and water, will not exceed $50,000.

FRAUDULENT PENSIONS.

Many of the Indiana Postmasters's Will Receive an Increased Salary—Fort Wayne $2,300.

WASHINGTON, June 30—They are after the fraudulent pensioners. A list comprising the names of a number of pensioners recommended by Commissioner Lochren to be dropped from the pension rolls has been handed to Secretary Hoke Smith and he has approved the recommendation. It has been found upon investigation by the pension bureau that the persons named in the list are not entitled to draw pensions. Among them are the names of eleven now drawing pensions, while the records of the war department show conclusively that they were deserters from the army and are still deserters at large. One pensioner, it has been discovered, was never in the military service at all, but has been drawing his pension with regularity and dispatch just the same.

A number are dropped from the rolls for not having served nine days, as the law requires. Others are dropped because the disability for which they are drawing pensions is the result of their own vicious habits. Several women who drew pensions as soldiers' widows are dropped because they have remarried, and one women will cease to draw a pension because she is living in "open and notorious adultery."

The work of examining the rolls with a view to the detection of fraud will be prosecuted with vigor, and at the same time current issues will be carefully scrutinized with the same object. Secretary Smith and Commissioner Lochren, while prosecuting this work, renew their assurances previously given that just as much care will be exercised to secure pensions for those who are entitled to them under the law as will be used to prevent fraud.

The postoffice department has completed the annual review and consequent readjustment of the salaries of the postmasters of the presidential offices. The following are the changes in salaries in Indiana:

DREXEL DEAD.

The Famous Banker Dies at Carlsbad, Germany.

He Left This Country a Few Weeks Ago in Good Health and Will Return a Corpse.

PHILADELPHIA, June 30.—A private cablegram received at Drexel's banking house states that A. J. Drexel died today at Carlsbad, Germany. The firm, however, do not know the man whose signature is on the message, and therefore know nothing as to the truth of its contents. Mr. Drexel left for Europe a few weeks ago in fairly good health.

LATER.

The cablegram bears the signature of D. B. Roskins, who is a son-in-law of Minister to Germany Runyon, and a personal friend of Mr. Drexel. The authenticity of the message, however, has not yet been learned by the firm, who are anxiously awaiting a reply to their cablegram of inquiry.

THE NEWS CONFIRMED.

Drexel & Co. at 2:15 o'clock this afternoon received a cablegram confirming A. J. Drexel's death. The message stated that he had a slight attack of pleurisy, but recovered and was then seized with apoplexy, from which he died.

CLEVELAND HALTING

Between Two Opinions as to the Extra Session of Congress.

Belief That It Will Assemble on August 1st—What the President Says.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—Touching the approximate date of the coming extra session of congress there is so much more guess work than real information that the careful correspondent who wants to give his readers all there is going, and at the same time not mislead them, is obliged to qualify almost everything he hears. The latest story, carrying with it considerable evidence of authority, is that the president talked to a democratic member of congress in substantially these words:

"I am halting between two opinions. I am urged by many to call an extra session of congress immediately. I am advised by others to abide by my original determination to call an extra session for the first Monday of September. I will consider no more applications for office. I am overburdened with matters of greater importance. I must reach a conclusion concerning an extra session, not only as president but as a democrat. In my opinion the first Monday in September will be the proper time. But I am reminded by party advisers that in the event of a financial disaster before that time my party will be held accountable, and the blame will attach to me personally. Others advise me that if congress is called in extra session and does not act promptly, there may be a financial crash before the silver act is repealed and my party will be held accountable for that misfortune and myself made blameworthy for bringing congress together too soon and causing the people to expect too much. You see that I am necessarily halting between two opinions."

The congressman who conveys this information says for himself: "From his manner I judge that the president is changing his opinion and will call an extra session by the 1st of August. I think that he intends to yield to popular expression and then leave the burden of responsibility upon congress."

SERIOUS RUNAWAY.

An Electric Street Car Crashes Into a Buggy Causing a Bad Accident—The Horse Hurt.

About 8 o'clock this morning a serious and what came near being a fatal accident, occurred on South Calhoun street, at the corner of Brackenridge. A young man employed by Contractor Trier was driving down the street in his employer's open buggy. At the point mentioned the vehicle was struck by electric car No. 37. The occupant was thrown out and a wheel was taken from the buggy. The horse then ran south on Calhoun street at a fearful pace. In front of Reverdorfen's drug store the buggy struck an electric light post and the horse becoming freed ran on down the street but was soon captured. The poor animal was badly cut about the hind legs and was taken to Leggitt Bros' barn, where it is being attended by a veterinary surgeon. The young man who was thrown from the buggy was bruised but not badly hurt.

The 2 year daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. J. Schultz, No. 79 Taylor street, had a narrow escape from death yesterday afternoon. The little one drank half a cup full of headlight oil. Dr. Enslen worked several hours with the child, but finally restored it to consciousness.

A PRETTY WEDDING

Was That of Miss Hattie Laughlin, at Hamilton, Ohio.

A very pretty wedding occurred at St. Mary's parsonage in Hamilton, Ohio, Wednesday morning at 8:45 o'clock, the happy couple who were united in the holy bonds of matrimony being Mr. Charles E. Eyster, of Toledo, Ohio and Miss Hattie Laughlin, formerly of this city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Dunsiere, in the presence of a few relatives. High mass was celebrated immediately after the ceremony, after which a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents on North Third street.

Caterer Stoble provided the excellent menu of which the guests partook at 11 o'clock. Mr and Mrs. Eyster left in the afternoon for Toledo, where they will be at home after August 1, at 1,067 Oakwood avenue.

Those present were, Mrs Col A. J. Eyster, Mr Wallace Eyster, of Toledo, Ohio, mother and brother of the groom. Mr. and Mrs Louis Peltier, of this city, grand parents of the bride, and the bride's immediate family.

DESERVED PROMOTIONS.

James H. Fry Gets Capt. Weldon's Vacant Office.

Chas. P. Cherry Goes into Enoch Cox's Department—Two Popular Young Railroad Men.

At 5 o'clock this afternoon Master Mechanic W. W. Atterbury appointed James H. Fry to the position of chief clerk in the master mechanic's office, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Major Frank R. Weldon.

Mr. Fry was chief clerk in the store room, under Storekeeper Enoch Cox. He is an expert accountant and a genial, whole-souled young man.

Charles P. Cherry, who has since the resignation of the late Charles W. Howey, some four years ago, been chief clerk in Master Car Builder Graham's office, succeeded to the office in the store room vacated by Mr. Fry. He is a most estimable young man and will perform the duties of the new office in an acceptable manner.

The two young men are popular in railroad circles and the promotions come to them as deserved recognitions of their splendid abilities. THE SENTINEL extends to both of them its congratulations over the new honors that have come to them. THE SENTINEL predicts that these promotions are only a step towards higher and more responsible positions.

They will leave Monday for Chicago to visit the world's fair and other points of interest, after which they will return to this city before departing for the east.

Mrs. A. Cummins, the lady who is afflicted with paralysis, and was removed from her home last week to the Old Ladies' home, is a daughter of one of General Wayne's scouts, Matthew Reilly, who served all through the war of 1812, and was mustered out at Fort Wayne. He died at Inwood, Ind., in 1870 at the age of ninety-three.

Last evening a well known young man of this city, whose name we withhold, was out bicycle riding. He went into a saloon for a glass of beer, on Columbia street, and left his wheel outside. A few moments later, when he left the saloon, the wheel was nowhere to be seen. It was valued at $125. This makes the sixth wheel stolen in the past month.

F. Frost, manager of the Australian Boomerang Throwers, is in the city today arranging for the appearance of his celebrated troupe here next Wednesday. They have in the band Australian cannibals and celebrated bushmen and are en route to the world's fair. They will give an exhibition here worth going many miles to see, introducing, as they do, their war dances, all their native Corrobories and deadly boomerang throwing, and exhibition of Cannibal warfare using their deadly boomerangs—a real treat for civilized humanity. They will remain in the city for several days.

The circuit court is [illegible] summer vacation.

Over thirty shopmen and many railroad men have signed a petition for the release of Henry R. Welton from the state reformatory.

A motion for a new trial in the habeas corpus case of Harry Smith was filed yesterday.

William T. Cunningham, of Meron, has brought suit against Frank Fairbanks, of Terre Haute, claiming $10,000 damages for alienating the affections of plaintiff's wife. Mr. Fairbanks is a wealthy bachelor, owning many fast horses.

William Rickard, of Kokomo, while dissipating, passed two spurious silver dollars. His arrest followed, and the authorities discovered that a quantity of spurious coin had been set afloat in that city within the past few days. It is surmised that other parties besides Rickard were engaged in passing it.

Chicago justice shops will present a lively appearance now that the new statute has gone into effect prohibiting imprisonment for misdemeanors or felonies unless the defendant has been tried by jury, except where such jury has been formally waived. The general impression is that the new law will not only greatly incumber the courts, but entail an enormous expense upon the city for jury and constable fees. Every jury trial will entail additional costs amounting to $5 and 8,6 and this must be borne by the city in all cases where the defendant is acquitted, or, if convicted, is unable to pay the costs.

SEEKING A PARDON.

A father's devotion to a wayward son is shown in the case of Winfield Lyburger, recently sent from this city to the northern penitentiary at Michigan City. At the last term of the United States court held here a few weeks ago Lyburger was sentenced to the penitentiary by Judge Baker for attempting to pass a counterfeit $50 bill on the Levi Brothers in this city. Now an effort is being made to secure his pardon from President Cleveland on the plea that he is mentally unbalanced and his health is such that he will not live but a few months on account of consumption.

Lyburger belongs to a good family, his father being a respected and wealthy farmer living in Illinois. For some years past he has been living a sort of checkered career. He was the prodigal son of the family and his wild life caused him to leave his father's home three or four years ago, since which time his parents never heard from him or of him until after he was landed in the Michigan City prison. On his way there he told Deputy United States Marshal Tom Wilkinson something about his past history and asked him to write his father about his imprisonment and the charge upon which he had been sent to prison. This Mr. Wilkinson did and in a few days afterward the old gentleman walked into Mr. Wilkinson's office in this city to see what he could do to secure the release of his son and save the disgrace of having one of the members of his family die in prison, as he knew Winfield must die before the expiration of his term.

An attorney was sought for and W. H. Shambaugh secured. He at once set to work and affidavits are now being secured in Ohio and elsewhere and with these Mr. Shambaugh will go to Washington and present Lyburger's case to President Cleveland, hoping to secure a pardon. It happens that Vice-President Stephenson lives near to old Mr. Lyburger's home in Illinois, and with him the latter is quite well acquainted. On this account he will be asked to interest himself in behalf of the son, and with this influence and the other circumstances in the case, it is thought a pardon will be secured. It is said that young Lyburger cannot live six months behind the prison bars, and if such be the case, it would be an act of mercy to let him die at home.

ROBBERS CAPTURED.

The Excited People May Lynch Them.

BRACKETTSVILLE, Texas, June 30.—The sheriff's posse this morning surrounded and captured three of the train robbers who held up the Aransas Pass train Tuesday. The men will be taken to the county jail for safe keeping, but as the feeling is intense over the killing of Fireman Martin it will be a miracle if they are not lynched before sunset.

VIENNA, June 30.—Interest in [illegible] long distance bicycle race from Flor[illegible] dorf, four miles from this city, to Be[illegible] lin, continues to increase. The Austrian favorite, Herr Sobeka, on whom considerable money was wagered, is practically out of the race. His machine broke down at Stockerau last night. Herr Leher, the German rider, who is backed heavily to win by his countrymen, was the twenty-fourth contestant to arrive at Moravia. He was delayed for two hours near Kolin by a furious rain storm. Sorge, of Dresden, was leading all the riders last night. He arrived at Jung-Buntzlau, in Bohemia, at 8:19 last evening, having covered 163 miles in fourteen hours and nineteen minutes. He was in good condition.

Last evening, at the parsonage home of Rev. Paschall, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church, occurred the wedding of Mr. Henry Miller and Miss Mary A. Martin, both of this city. The affair was a pleasant one.

The Safest Of All Investments.

Nothing equals the stock of Building and Loan Associations.

The capital invested in these Associations in Ohio is shown by a recent report of the state inspector to exceed by many millions the combined capital of all the National, State and Savings Banks of that state.

The same or such a statement is true of many other states, and is probably true of Indiana.

Throughout the country the number of these Associations far exceeds the combined number of National and State and Savings Banks.

Not one of all these Associations but has safely weathered the financial squalls of the past few weeks. The record is a remarkable one and proves true what students of finance have long asserted, that nothing is so absolutely safe as the stock of a conservatively managed Building and Loan Association.

The Tri State is now again selling its Installment Stock. On this stock you pay in 70 cents per share per month, for an estimated time of 78 months. At maturity you receive $100 per share for the payments thus made, affording a most profitable investment.

The Tri State's other stock is intended for persons who desire to receive a regular return from their investment. It is known as Prepaid Stock.

It pays a dividend of 3 per cent. every six months. It is not taxable as it participates under certain contingencies in the other profits of the company.

It is proving a favorite form of investment because of its absolute safety. Whenever desired the money can be withdrawn with interest to date of withdrawal in accordance with the provisions of section 4410 of the revised statutes of Indiana, which provide that building and loan associations may pay out one-half of their monthly receipts to retiring stockholders.

The average monthly income of the Tri State is now $50,000. Its assets amount to over One Million of Dollars, all invested in first mortgage upon real estate at but half its value.

Not a dollar has been lost since the date of its organization now nearly four years ago—a wonderful record which speaks volumes for the careful, conservative management of the prominent Fort Wayne citizens who are in charge of its affairs.

It will never be too hot in this world for the ice men.

THE Daughters of the Revolution will celebrate the Fourth of July all over the country and they will make it revolve too.

THE small boy with his Fourth of July fire crackers and torpedoes has begun to make life miserable for the rest of humanity.

THERE must be something in the gold cure. Experience has proven that the silver remedy is of little efficacy when money's tight.

MOSQUITOES are not very large, when you look at them but they manage to let a fellow know that they are around, especially at night.

INDIANA republicans have settled down to the conviction that General Harrison will be nominated for president again in 1896.

GOV. MATTHEWS returned to Indianapolis today. We may now expect an appointment for the vacant judgeship on the supreme court bench of the state.

KATE FIELD says there are not enough brass bands on the world's fair grounds on Sunday. Get them out. If we have an open Sunday maybe it might just as well be a loud Sunday too.

THE Anderson Herald inquires if Anderson is to become a sort of Roby, with prize fights every night? And while the Herald admits that it will do no good to protest, still it wants to go upon record as objecting.

HON. WHITELAW REID is making himself very conspicuous by his attempts to free his party from responsibility for the passage of the Sherman law. It can't be done, Whitelaw, your party must father its own child.

THAT cow-boy's feat of riding a broncho to the world's fair, one thousand miles in thirteen days, doesn't seem so much until one stops to think about what street car travel in Fort Wayne was a few years ago with the horse cars.

IN its handsome and commodious new quarters, near the Bates house, and clothed in an elegant new dress, with many other improvements which give evidence of progress, the Indianapolis Sentinel is now one of the best newspapers of the west.

THE superiority of American newspapers over English journals is well illustrated in the case of the Victoria disaster. Despite the difference in distances from the scene of the disaster, the American newspapers published the first authentic news of the accident in advance of the British journals.

THE Fourth of July in America will be devoted to grand displays of patriotism in honor of liberty. The same day in Berlin will mark the climax of autocracy in the old world for on that day a Reichstag subservient to a "war lord" will assemble to give him more bayonets to back up his absolutism.

CHAPTER I.

THE BALLOON.

The sun had just sunk behind the hills, leaving Evans Gulch in a soft shadow and its prominent citizens in a brisk discussion on the merits of an old map which Sheriff Woodruff had produced to confirm one of his statements. An old map it looked to be; greasy and marked by the fingers of husky prospectors; almost as ancient in appearance as an Egyptian papyrus that had been pressed closely to the bosom of a mummy for ages. Yet the sheriff had sworn by it for years, and he dared to produce it and lay it side by side with one of the government's newest, that was almost as unintelligible from its plexus of red, blue and green lines, dots and specks, squares and circles, figures and names.

The sheriff proudly stated that his map was made in thirty-seven, a fact that, for him, was proof of its virtue, for he believed that a map, like whisky, gathered a virtue with years. It showed vast vacant spaces marked "unexplored territory," and in spite of the fact that the chimneys in Leadville smoked in the distance, three miles away, where his reliable map showed an arid region, he still affirmed his faith in it. He had his supporters, three or four, who swore by the sheriff, and they stoutly backed him in his assertion that "there's just as many unexplored tracts in this 'ere country as ever—or nearly as many anyhow." Cale Whitley had the majority with him as with fluent gestures and few words he spread the new map, gaudy, butterfly like, on the faro table and said scornfully, "Put your thumb on a spot where there's no names of hills, towns, rivers or camps!" The sheriff, whose thumb was none of the smallest, would have found it a difficult task even had he essayed it, but he would not deign to bestow a glance upon the "circus chart" as he called the painted thing.

All Evans Gulch knew what this discussion was about. It was an old subject, and the new map had been procured as a clincher to Cale's oft repeated assertions that "the whole country was explored, and no use talkin." A few of the least interested stood on the outskirts of the little gathering, half in the wide doorway, watching, with idle smiles that now and again broke into laughs as either disputant scored a point, the big, quivering, fat figure of the sheriff—his red brown face, covered with freckles, pursed up into oleaginous wrinkles as he listened—and Cale's wiry, nervous form and excited eyes as he ran his thin, calloused hands through his long, leather colored hair. The argument was emphasized, punctuated and rounded out at frequent intervals by the most astonishing and unnecessary profanity.

The car was dashed against the ground with such force as to throw Gilbert out.

Remarks of a highly personal nature interlarded the discourse, and names and adjectives were applied with an unconscious natural freedom that would have amazed any one unused to Evans Gulch. But remarks as to one's morality, sanity, parentage or nativity, when applied as aids to the open discussion of a subject, were unnoticed in that locality, and were considered only as so many flowers of metaphor, brightening the dull path of logical argument. So Cale Whitley, in applying to the sheriff the title of a "drivelling old windbag," in nowise reflected upon his official capacity, and likewise, when the sheriff pointedly pronounced Whitley "an escaped lunatic from some eastern asylum," he did not in the least influence the opinion of his hearers, who knew Cale to be a good prospector and mineralogist and a man of varied accomplishments.

Standing nearest to the door, with his face turned upward toward the western sky, stood a lean tall boy watching the golden light wear off the hilltops and turn leaden in the fading of the day. His face, which was neither dreamy nor bright, wearing rather a listless, tired look, suddenly filled with startled and fearful eagerness; he raised his hand and pointed toward the sky. The man nearest to him, who had been an interested listener, catching the astonishment and terror in the boy's eyes, turned quickly, and a shrill cry escaped his lips. At the same moment a hoarse sound of many voices [illegible] and all hurried to the doorway to behold sweeping up the slope an object new to Evans Gulch.

It was a large silk balloon. The dying sun's rays, already [illegible] behind the hills, fell on its sides, causing it to resemble a large ripe pear hanging in the blue vault.

The basket had a solitary occupant, who was making signs to the people at the eastern end of the gulch to catch his anchor rope. They stood in amazed delight, however, and the monster came sweeping along, the rope's end trailing up the street until Cale, seeing the object of the aerial voyager's shouts and signs, cried:

"Get hold of his rope, boys, and stop him!"

A moment more a laughing, rolling mass of men hilariously tumbled over each other in their efforts to seize the rope, like a lot of frolicking boys, and an instant later the giant mass swayed and rose a few feet from the ground in front of "Keenan's point."

The aeronaut, leaning from his basket car, directed them to draw him down, and alighted among them with a grateful word of thanks. He was a man of about forty-five, brown bearded, pale and serious, but there was a firm look in his blue eyes that showed pluck and skill, and his mouth, clean cut, a trifle thin, but graceful, gave evidence of determination and perseverance.

The first words of the aerial visitor after thanking "the boys" were earthly and fleshly.

"The best in the land!" readily replied Cale. "Anything in reason from soda crackers to canvasback ham. We're out of whisky, but there's lots of beer in camp yet. Come in, stranger, while we tie your hoss."

This proceeding, however, the stranger directed and assisted in explaining that he feared lest unpracticed hands might cause the loss of precious gas. He then entered the building, a one story structure, with a very wide doorway, where the faro table, in full view of the street, occupied the central space, with many stools and narrow chairs scattered about.

The lean boy who had first espied the balloon had been dispatched to procure the guest some lunch, and he made such haste that he returned with it by the time the stranger had seated himself. Surrounded by the crowd of rough, long haired and bearded men he presented a striking contrast to them in his neat attire. Had he walked into Evans Gulch in a Norfolk jacket, knee breeches and a cork helmet it is highly probable that he would have met with a far different reception and been treated with the scorn and contempt of the entire populace in their own wild western way. But his attire was befitting his advent, the first of the kind that the Gulch had been treated to, and the Gulchers saw nothing inappropriate in his costume.

Balloons were unique, so were balloonists' clothes, was the natural verdict, unspoken, almost unthought. Yet all eyed him curiously, while kindly, and waited impatiently the completion of his modest repast.

His eyes were busy, too, roaming frankly from face to face in a way that somehow told them he was "sizing them up," as Cale expressed it afterward, glancing at the faro table, the specimens of quartz, porphyry, lead ores and carbonates upon the narrow shelf on the wall and the big broken roulette wheel in the corner, tilted up on its side to afford more room to eager gamblers around the faro table.

When he had finished Cale tossed the paper in which the lunch had been brought into the street and said: "Now, stranger, let's hear your story. This is the first time we've had a balloon up here, and we're naturally interested."

The stranger, with a good natured smile, looked around at the eager, roll hardened and sun hardened faces—many of them—and began:

"My name is Pierce—H. R. Pierce, of San Francisco. I left Denver the day before yesterday in the balloon, and was carried south till near Colorado Springs, where the current changed and carried me northwest. I was compelled to remain in the car, the nature of the country not permitting an easy landing. I am making an attempt to cross the continent in a balloon. That is my story, gentlemen, all there is of it, and I thank you for your kindness."

Finding so tame an explanation of the phenomenon, most of the crowd soon dispersed.

Cale Whitley and the sheriff somehow felt themselves to be in a measure Pierce's hosts, and felt the impropriety of indulging in Evans Gulch's only amusement while their guest refrained therefrom.

When Pierce inquired for the hotel they both "smiled loudly," and stated that the place had not risen to that dignity yet—fourteen saloons, nine faro banks, a postoffice, a provision store (also a saloon) and a "lockup" constituted, apart from sundry quartz crushers, the entire borough; but they wished to "extend to him the hospitality of their own 'shanty'—the best in the place too."

Thither they conducted him at once, seeing therein a way out of their dilemma, for they both felt the agony of witnessing the game while being prevented from playing.

A long, rambling conversation ensued, during which the characters of the two men unfolded themselves to Pierce's eyes, and he recognized their thoroughly practical American worth. The sheriff was transparent; simply a big, good natured Jerseyman by birth, who had lived in various parts of the west since boyhood, having made several small fortunes, spent them and expected to make another—a type frequently to be found all over the continent. Cale Whitley was not so easily read. He was more beneath the surface and was harder to get at, but Pierce had seen too many men of learning and refinement adrift in these western wilds to probe too deeply into any mystery he might imagine in Cale's past. He was content to find in them both materials that he might use. It was nearly ten o'clock when he said:

"I am here for a purpose in which you might, if you are inclined, aid me materially. It's rather a long story, but I will make it as short as possible."

He lighted his pipe, as the other two had done, and smoked a few minutes in silence, while they drew their chairs closer. Then he began:

"Two years ago I had a balloon made and left San Francisco in the month of June, with the wind taking us rapidly eastward. With me was a young man named Eric Gilbert. He was about thirty years of age and one of the brightest men I ever knew. A linguist, a scientist, a mechanic, an artist; in fact he was possessed of more practical knowledge and cultivated accomplishments than any other man I have met, one of the most daring yet gentle, good tempered fellows in the world. He was nearly six feet in height and weighed about a hundred and sixty pounds, and he was an athlete too. He could shoot well and ride well, just the kind of a man in fact to undertake such an adventure as we meditated. It was to cross the continent to the Atlantic, and for a while all went swimmingly.

"We had crossed the Rockies successfully and were in the Wasatch range, or rather between the Wasatch and the Elk mountains, when the current, which had been almost uniformly westward for days, suddenly changed and carried us down toward Arizona. We were not alarmed, although our supply of water was somewhat scanty; yet the gas held out well, and we knew that we would strike water at intervals. We had on board when we started a dozen carrier pigeons, seven of which had already been released and returned home.

"We released one in the Elk mountains just before the current changed. We drove south all day, passing over the wildest and most magnificent canyon scenery at a high altitude, in a cloudless sky, until nearly sunset, when there came up a terrific storm.

"In spite of our attempt to rise above it we were hurled along with dreadful velocity and found ourselves nearing the earth rapidly and in danger of being dashed against the enormous cliffs of the canyons, whose cavernous depths yawned below us. The lightning flashed around us, and I feared every moment that the balloon would be set on fire. It became darker every moment, and nightfall found us very near the earth, taking mighty bounds up and down and driving along at the rate of a mile a minute. The anchor was thrown out, but failed to hold, the only results being to make the bounds and jerks more fierce.

"It was totally dark, and about eight o'clock at night the car was dashed against the ground with such force as to tear apart several of the ropes, throwing Eric Gilbert out, with all our instruments, the pigeon crate and ballast, in an instant. The loss of so much weight caused the balloon to rise at once and dash away again, going higher every moment. I was almost crazy and lost control of myself. I looked down, and I fancied I saw lights and dwellings down in the canyon, people and cattle running about when the lightning illumined the scene, but as I knew that it was an uninhabitable wilderness I laid it to excited imagination, and I knew that poor Gilbert's bones would be whitening under the burning sun in a few days. It was impossible to help him. I could only hold on and let the balloon drive. It became frightfully cold, and I found that I had also dislocated my arm.

"After a time I became unconscious and fell to the bottom of the car, which was covered with ice. When I recovered consciousness I found myself in the hands of a Mexican cattleman, on whose ranch the balloon had descended, near Albuquerque, New Mexico. I was with him for several weeks, very ill and delirious most of the time. But I recovered and returned to San Francisco, where, to my surprise, I found that all but one of the carrier pigeons had returned before me. I heard nothing of Eric and naturally mourned him as dead, for no man could exist in the region three days. It is a waterless, burning, alkali desert.

"Now for the strangest part of my story:

"One evening two weeks ago I observed a carrier pigeon, evidently a stranger, endeavoring to enter my coop, with a message fastened to his tail in the usual manner. I went up and let him in and recognized him at once as the bird that had failed to return. My heart sprang up in my throat, and my hands trembled so that I could scarcely detach the message. It was written on some kind of a small skin and read thus, for here it is."

Pierce took from his pocketbook a white parchment and unfolded it upon the table. The others watched him with an intense gaze. Then holding it up to the light he read:

"H. R. Pierce, San Francisco, California:

"If you are alive, help me. I am in a city of ancient people in a canyon, latitude thirty-three degrees thirty minutes, longitude thirty-two degrees thirty minutes west from Washington, as near as I can make it. There is no way of escape. The people know of no other world or race and believe me supernatural. But it can't last much longer. There's millions of dollars here in solid gold. It will pay a relief party. The population is about twenty-five hundred. I have learned the language and written a book that will make people's eyes open. If this falls into the hands of any white man, for God's sake forward to H. R. Pierce, San Francisco, or, if he is missing, send help to me at once. ERIC L. GILBERT."

"Well, that's all there is of it. I am going to find him, and you are the kind of men I should like to have join me in the endeavor, for I believe he is alive. I believe every word of this message. I should like to have you organize a wagon train and search for him while I make the attempt in the balloon. It's risky, I know, but I've a feeling that it will succeed. I believe that it was the same city that I saw as I was whirled away that night when we struck the cliff. As I figure it, my friends, the location of this unknown city must be in the San Francisco river region, one of the most inaccessible places in the United States. It lies north of Fort Bowie, where, I think, we might make our start, and is bounded by the Black river on the north, the Gila range on the west and on the east by the Rio Salarosa and the White mountains.

"Clifton is the nearest settlement, I believe, to this arid wilderness, and I find that the chances for a successful balloon search would be best if begun in that locality. The air currents seem more steadily southwestern than otherwise, and I wish to start from there. It is a tough country in which to travel, from all accounts, but I think we can overcome all difficulties, and the venture will pay us if successful. I want to make a business proposition to you without calling for any feeling or sympathy on your part at all. I will give you each ten thousand dollars if we succeed in rescuing Gilbert, and five thousand if we fail after making all proper efforts. How does it strike you?"

Cale had already felt his blood stir with the spirit of adventure and had made up his mind long before Pierce ceased speaking, and as he concluded said emphatically:

"I am with you, heart and soul. It's just the kind of work I need, and I believe this old gas bag here is as anxious as I am to undertake the search."

The sheriff, slow minded, as most men of his size and kind are, was, however, as willing as Whitley, but he was older and more lethargic, more prone to see the difficulties, if not the dangers, than Cale, and, too, he relished the ease and comfort of the semicivilization of Evans Gulch, preferring it to hard riding and hard sleeping on the sunburned plains. For him, however, the money consideration was the motive power; the prize was too glittering not to be worth an effort—such plums came in his way all too rarely nowadays—and he signified his assent by asking Pierce how soon he wished to start.

"At once," he answered. "Every moment is precious. While we idle here Gilbert may be in danger. I feel it in some way, and I am anxious to get to work."

Cale's mind had been busy for some time on the problem, and bringing out the new map was intently studying its lines, in which the others joined him.

Before them in imagination spread the desert of the San Francisco—only a little space upon the map but full of the unknown and mysterious, surrounded by lines and dots, with oft heard, well known names printed beside them. It seemed impossible that there could be a city full of inhabitants in that little space and the world know nothing about it. But Pierce declared that few people had ever penetrated even the border land of this wilderness, and that it was extremely probable.

Not for an instant did these two men, shrewd and wily as they undoubtedly were, sharpened by the grinding of years of struggles, question his sanity or singleness of purpose. They somehow felt at once the honesty of his aim and object, and debated only the best measures to insure their success, and before they slept they had formed their plans.

A week later found them together at Tombstone, Arizona Territory, gathering up a wagon train—men, horses and provisions—for the expedition. Another week and the big balloon swayed and struggled at its moorings as though yearning, like an imprisoned bird, to soar aloft on its errand, surrounded by a crowd of men making bets on the success of the undertaking and giving large odds against the return of the airship. At the same moment almost the people of Fort Bowie were watching a little train of pack mules and horsemen climbing the mountain, with the sheriff in the lead, going north and waving their hats as they vanished beyond the distant hilltops.

Cale sat in the car, cool and calm, answering with pointed western sarcasm the bantering of the crowd and rather anxious to be off, while Pierce nervously busied with the last arrangements.

At three o'clock he carefully scrutinized the car and its contents, took a last look aloft, sprang into the oscillating basket, and in another moment the balloon was shooting up in a sweeping slant toward the clouds and toward the White mountains. The shouts grew fainter and fainter as the earth receded, and the men below grew into moving specks and disappeared entirely as a gray veil of cloud intervened, and they floated alone in the ether.

The search had begun.

CHAPTER II.

ATZLAN, THE HIDDEN CITY.

The beams of the morning sun had been slanting down on the level plain above Atzlan for an hour, but the city was still in deep shadow a thousand or more feet below. They thus hovered about the vermilion edges of the great cliffs, mingling with yellow and gray and saffron colored belts farther down, throwing into ghostly relief the white, castellated promontories of the majestic sculptured wall and deepening the blackness of the dark recesses.

But there were people astir in the streets and fields and on the housetops, for the storm that had risen in fury during the night had wrought some damage to dwellings, and, it was feared, to the flocks in the pastures.

But no eye was directed toward the cliffs, for the sky was now clear, and no further disturbance was apprehended from that direction. Storms were few and far between in Atzlan; they raged on the plains at frequent intervals in springtime, but troubled not the dwellers in the deep canyon, who never took the pains to climb the steep cliff sides.

Had curious eyes peered upward they would perhaps have discerned a figure outlined clearly against the sky, but they could not have seen that it wore no Atzlan garb, and that it surpassed in height any Atzlan man, or that it bent forward and seemed to eagerly strive to penetrate the darkness of the canyon. Each early riser carried a torch and was too intent upon his errand to waste time gazing aloft, or he might have seen the figure slowly clambering down an ancient, rude pathway leading to the first terrace, where ruined cliff houses and caves, abandoned centuries ago, were the only evidences of former human occupation.

But the man on the heights had seen the moving torches, and up where he was it was light enough to easily pick his way.

It was Eric Gilbert, and he was seeking a point of observation before it grew light in order to ascertain what manner of men these were who carried the lights far beneath him. Hostile Indians he knew might in all reason be encountered in these wilds, and he had escaped one danger too narrowly to fall carelessly into another.

Events had crowded so quickly upon him during the last few hours that he was prepared for anything. Unaware even in what state or territory in the Union he had been thrown in the last wild bound of the balloon, he did not know what he might encounter, and though the craving for water and food began to assert itself he was resolved to let his caution govern his necessity.

He had gathered the instruments, which he had thrown in a heap near the edge of the cliff, and covered them with a blanket. They consisted of a small electric battery and lighting apparatus (an invention of Pierce's), a lantern, a thermometer and barometer, a camera and plate box holding a hundred instantaneous plates, some medical instruments in a case, a quadrant and a few other articles.

He carried his Winchester rifle in his left hand, a blanket thrown over his arm, and a carrier pigeon, whose broken wing hung limp and flapping, in his right hand, making his descent a matter of care. The light was growing stronger in the canyon when he reached a level shelf or terrace edged with a rough stone wall and lined with caves and cliff dwellings; caves whose mouths were built up in cyclopean masonry, leaving a narrow entrance to be reached by a ladder of rope or poles.

He felt the need of haste, although even yet he could see nothing in the abyss below, and finding a convenient opening into a cave close at hand, yet where he could overlook the depths, he laid down his burden and waited for the light to fill the canyon.

The flutter of the wounded bird aroused his pity, and he bound its wing to its side with a strip of his handkerchief and laid it upon his blanket, feeling a sort of companionship in its presence—a link with the outer world. Resting as he was from a long vigil and a long continued struggle, he stretched himself beside the bird and fell asleep.

Long before the sun rose upon Atzlan a figure stirred upon the top of the highest building in the city, whence arose a slim, blue column of smoke. The figure moved with slow, hesitating steps from one side of the low walled housetop to the other, as if from habit, although the burden of years had turned the exercise into a toilsome journey.

He was Iklapel, the high priest of Atzlan, watching before the sacred, inextinguishable fire of Kinchahan, the sun god, which for centuries had burned and would burn forever.

Even in the half light of the coming dawn it could be seen that Iklapel was old and blind, and though his figure bowed many an inch before his only master, Time, fine and tall, thin and withered, it still showed the remains of a powerful and graceful form. Now and then he held his wasted hands over the languid fire to measure its burning or cast a few twigs of cedar upon it, muttering, as old men do, to himself the while. As the sky grew brighter and redder with the dawn he seemed to feel it and know that the day was approaching, for he rapped sharply several times upon the roof, as if in summons to another person.

In a moment a second figure appeared, coming up through a trapdoor, and stood before him in a respectful, yet easy and familiar attitude. Then as the aged Iklapel tottered it sprang to his side and lovingly passed a strong arm about him, leading him to a stone seat beside the altar and placing him tenderly upon it. The old man reached out his hand, feeling for that of the younger man, and placing it against his breast he held it there in silence. After awhile he spoke, and his voice was round and full, though now and then a quaver, a grace note as it were, broke upon its even tones:

"Kulcan, my son, the beating of my heart grows feeble, and this day, the greatest, most sacred in the year, may be my last. For a hundred and two years I have seen the sun rise over the red cliffs, but tomorrow I may not see it. Thus I feel that now, while my strength remains in me, I should leave you my last words of instruction and advice. You will succeed me as high priest, and there is no one more worthy, no one to whom I would leave the cares and the honors of my sacred office more willingly nor more fearlessly. Today, as you well know, I was to make the holy sacrifice to the sun, the sacrifice of the Thirteenth Year, yet my strength fails me, and you, my son, shall perform the sacred rite. No one but myself for eighty-five years has shed the blood of the virgin sacrifice, and yet 'tis with a cheerful heart I lay the office down. At noon put on the holy robe, and, as you alone have been instructed, perform the rite that our people may be held together and their religion be preserved."

The hand against Iklapel's bosom was trembling, and Kulcan's figure shook with the emotion he endeavored to suppress. For some moments he appeared unable to reply. Then placing his hand upon the old man's shoulder he said:

"My father, you tell me to perform the rite that our people may be held together and their religion preserved. Why not say that the sun god may be merciful to us and preserve our people?"

"Oh, Kulcan, you will not learn the lesson I have striven so diligently to teach. Know that the people are not as we are and cannot be lifted to the level of our knowledge. You, who have been initiated into the mysteries and dwelt in the higher atmosphere of lofty thought, do not realize the distance between their and our conception of religion. Among all the priests to you alone have I dared to reveal my inward thoughts and true beliefs, but it was because I saw in you, as in the dead governor, your father, the spirit of philosophic reason, as well as the tact to bow to popular prejudice in religious matters. I have spoken to you as to my own soul. You know that I despise the images of the god and worship him, as I have taught you, without fires or feasts or sacrifices; but you know that the people require these signs and symbols to keep them true to their obedience; that 'tis thus we rule them and not with reason or philosophy. 'Tis the tribute they pay to intellect—the tribute they have paid for countless ages and must in some form continue to pay."

"But 'tis time," impulsively interrupted Kulcan, "that they were brought to see that these cruel, inhuman sacrifices should be abolished. Something, I know not what, tells me that we are beyond and above them now, and that the people themselves will welcome the change and rejoice that their children no longer may be thrown to the senseless image of the fierce, bloodthirsty sun god! Oh, father," he cried, shuddering, "can we not devise, before it is forever too late, some means to prevent this murder of Ainee?"

"It is even now too late," answered the aged priest coldly. "Can you not see with what feverish impatience the people await the light of this day? They know their children are safe now that the lot has fallen on the girl Ainee, and they thirst for the spectacle for which they have waited thirteen years. Today they believe Quetzalcoatl, with his dove upon his hand, will return, as on this day for ages they have looked for him. In vain will they look; he will not return, but they must have their sacrifice, or their wrath will turn upon the priests, and we shall perish. Upon it rests our very existence. Murmurs have already been heard against us—we are called idlers and bread eaters of the poor. It is our only hope, and upon you it will rest today. Were it only a question of my life or your life alone, I would willingly die; but we cannot prevent the slaughter by our deaths.

"Alas, my son" (the old man's voice softened and quivered), "time brings but the same tale. Eighty long years ago I, too, loved a maiden as you, I know—nay, start not—love Ainee; yet she was chosen, and this withered hand plunged the sacred knife into her throat. Her eyes were on me as she fell upon my breast—they are with me now! I killed her, and when the day was done I climbed the cliff and wandered out upon the desert plains which lie about the city in search of some other land. For days I roamed, returning for water and food, and then starting anew in other directions, as you, too, have done, in a spirit of discovery, and finding, as you have done, that we are alone in the world—a city in a desert—the remnants of a once great people, I returned to my duties, and since that day I have been the most zealous in guarding the traditional customs of our religion."

"But, my father, we have the power, if we will, to prevent this horrid sacrifice today! Some plausible excuse can be offered to the credulous people, and an animal perhaps be substituted for the beautiful maiden."

"It is too late, even were I willing," replied the aged priest. "As is the custom when the feast of the Thirteenth Year approaches, all prodigies in nature, in the skies and on the earth, are eagerly regarded as omens of good or evil. The birth of the six horned calf has been accepted by the priests and the people as an evil sign, and the terrific storm of last night will have wrought their fears to a higher pitch. And now I will reveal to you a cause of secret uneasiness and great fear even to me.

"Last night, as the storm raged with a fury I have not often seen, there came a blast that shook the temple, and there seemed to sweep over my head a something, I know not what, but I felt its touch as though long, slender threads brushed by me, and out of the cloud there came a loud voice in wailing; then it passed, but I heard the voice, and others, too, must have heard its loud tones. Think not that I was dreaming, or that it was the vagary of a blind man's mind. It is the truth. Long have I preached signs and wonders, yet this is the first I have myself witnessed or believed in. Were I to attempt to prevent the sacrifice the envious priests themselves will turn upon us, and we will but add our own bodies to the offering. I know it and it is impossible."

Forms of Animal Life.

Humboldt and Cuvier estimated the number of species of mammals, or creatures which suckle their young, to be but little short of 600; of birds, 4,000; insects, 44,000; reptiles, 700; in all about 50,000 species. In the Southern hemisphere birds are five times more numerous than the mammalia. Toward the equator both birds and reptiles are most plentiful and most highly colored. Cuvier said that the record left by the fossils prove that the mammalia was once as numerously represented as are the bird species at the present day.

A DISTURBANCE

isn't what you want, if your stomach and bowels are irregular. That's about all you get, though, with the ordinary pill. It may relieve you for the moment, but you're usually in a worse state afterward than before.

This is just where Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets do most good. They act in an easy and natural way, very different from the huge, old-fashioned pills. They're not only pleasanter, but there's no reaction afterward, and their help lasts. One little sugar-coated pellet for a gentle laxative or corrective—three for a cathartic. Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Dizziness, Sick and Bilious Headaches, are promptly relieved and cured.

They're the smallest, the easiest to take—and the cheapest pill you can buy, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

AFFAIRS OF THE RAIL.

New Engineer of Maintenance of Way on the Pittsburg.

Accidents, Incidents and Personal Mention of the People About the Railway Centers.

This morning G. Erickson assumed the duties of engineer of maintenance of way of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago railway, a position that has been satisfactorily filled by Thomas Jackson for a number of years. Mr. Erickson comes from the Hocking Valley road, where he held a similar office. He is a young man and is well qualified for the position. He will make this city his home. Mr. Jackson has been assigned to special duties, for which he is eminently fitted, and will continue in the service of the company.

ANOTHER APPOINTMENT.

This morning F. J. Greer was appointed to the position of chief clerk in Trainmaster J. W. Clark's office, to succeed James Merriweather, who has received the appointment of assistant to Mr. Clark. Mr. Greer was a clerk in the Pittsburg freight office for a number of years. Formerly he was a brakeman on the road, and while thus engaged lost a leg at Forest, Ohio.

DAILY MENTION.

William Dreyer, of the Pittsburg blacksmith shop, is at the world's fair.

The Big Four now runs dining cars on eight of its fast daily trains in and out of Indianapolis.

General Manager Joseph Wood, of the Pennsylvania, was in the city several hours yesterday.

U. Stahl, of the Pittsburg shops, will go to Bucyrus, Ohio, tomorrow to spend a few days with relatives.

H. O. Russell, who has been sick for two weeks, reported for duty yesterday. He is a Nickel Plate switchman.

George Yost, draughtsman at the Bass works, went to Wabash this morning in the interest of the company.

A special train of seven cars bearing Boston people to the world's fair passed over the Nickel Plate at noon today.

Gen. F. B. Wadsworth, who for many years represented the Northern Pacific at Chicago, has resigned, to take effect July 1.

Wallace Kendall, inspector of the winding department of the electric light works, has returned to his duties after a short illness.

The difference between a light window and a "light" man on a railroad train is one you can't open and the other you can't shut up.

Fred Tegtmeyer resumed work in the Pittsburg boiler shop this morning after a few days' absence on account of pressing private business.

A world's fair excursion train passed over the Pittsburg at 11 o'clock this morning loaded to the guard rails. It started from Mansfield, Ohio.

Conductor Charles Zeigler reported for duty yesterday after a lay off for the benefit of an extra conductor whose trips this month have been few.

Mrs. Charles Rice, wife of the Pittsburg blacksmith, is quite sick and her husband has been unable to work on account of her serious condition for over a week.

Richard Engelking, of the electric light works, was called from his work yesterday by the sudden illness of his little daughter. The child is reported better today.

Tomorrow evening Mr. and Mrs. C. Klinkenburger will go to Chicago to remain until next Wednesday. Mr. Klinkenburger is a carpenter employed in the Pittsburg tank shop.

The switchmen of Fort Wayne are at Rome City today. The excursion party was much larger than expected and the railway company had to furnish a special train of five coaches.

George Slater, of the Pittsburg machine shop, and Frederick Meunewish, sr., of the east car shop, will be among the world's fair visitors on the Fourth. They will leave tomorrow for Chicago.

The Bass company is today shipping two engines to the Electric Light company of Paxton, Ill. Within the next fortnight the Bass works will turn out a half dozen engines to be shipped in as many directions.

It is announced that Henry Villard intends to withdraw from all the companies with which he has been identified and retire from active business life.

Zachariah Taylor Hellner, an employe of the east car shops, is off duty on account of a badly bruised hand, which was injured by a board falling upon it.

Samuel Early, private secretary of President McKeen, of the Vandalia road, will retire from that position this week to become manager and treasurer of the Terre Haute tool works.

Reuben Fronefield was taken violently ill at Rhinesmith & Simonson's factory, where he is employed, yesterday and was taken to his home on Superior street, in a hack. He is still quite ill.

A Michigan City paper says that the Lake Erie and Western is daily running about 250 passengers to the boats for the World's fair, and their Saturday night low rate excursions furnish about 400 people for the boats.

William Stephen, chief draughtsman of the Pittsburg and to whom in a great measure is due the efficiency of the class X passenger engines, built in the Fort Wayne shops, has returned from a business trip to Chicago.

Herman Regel and Charles Seibt, machinists employed by the Bass company, left this morning, the former for Vincennes, where he will install a steam plant, and the latter for Chicago, to spend a week at the world's fair.

On the Louisville division of the Pennsylvania lines so much of the distance has long side tracks that it almost equals a double track. Fully one half of the distance these side tracks have been arranged so as to be used as double track when necessary to do so.

The Nickel Plate yards are short of men today, on account of so many of them going with the excursion to Rome City. Those who went are Switchmen Frank Gilliam, Frank Bushem and Ahern, Telegrapher F. S. Rockwell, Clerk Charles McKeon and Night Clerk Julius Rogge.

This being the last day of the month the Wabash shops are working with a half force, in order that the pay roll will not exceed the amount set aside for that purpose. There is plenty of work, however. Foreman Charles Agster, of the machine shop, is spending the day at Toledo.

A Detroit paper says that the Pullman car shops in that city, which have given employment to eleven hundred men, will close its doors within two weeks, and those who are in authority say they will never be reopened. This is simply the result of the natural depression after the tremendous rush in preparing for the world's fair.

The Pennsylvania base ball club will leave for Elkhart Monday noon, over the Lake Shore road. The players are Peter Lauer, Lloyd Judy, William Cherry, C. W. Hall, Harvey Stahl, Theodore N. Kucher, George Willcocks, Vince Robbins and H. C. Daseler. Those who will accompany the boys are C. L. Daseler, M. C. Tierney and W. S. Wells.

Edward McCann, who was foreman of the Wabash railway bridge builders on the middle division six or seven years ago, is now superintendent of bridges and water stations of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road, with headquarters at Wellington, Kansas. James McCann, the Wabash engineer, a brother to Ed, resides in this city.

Augustus Vick, one of the veteran passenger conductors on the Pennsylvania road, was buried on Tuesday at Pittsburg. Among the floral emblems was a passenger coach three feet in length and twenty-one inches high; on one side in blue immortelles were the letters "P. R. R." The deceased was well educated, and for a time was correspondent for the New York Herald from the scenes of the Russo-Turkish war. On the road he was known as the model passenger conductor, not only in moving trains and hauling passengers, but in his reports, which were very clear and concise.

FROM EDITOR WRIGHT.

For Correct Thinking, Healthy Nerves are Necessary.

In Worry, Not Work, In Excitement, Not Labor, is the Peril.

For correct thinking a healthy brain is necessary. It is necessary as well for peace of mind and body.

In worry, not work; in excitement, not calm labor lies the greatest peril, and that peril is greater as the wear and tear of modern life increases.

A brain that only gets just enough nourishment to keep it alive will not produce much, and will not develop its powers. It is in recognition of this fact that so many eminent workers in the literary field have been publicly recommending the great restorer of vitality, Paine's celery compound.

Few newspaper men are better known than the able and energetic editor of the Haverhill, Mass., Gazette, Mr. John B. Wright, who, by the way, is a near relative of Boston's most famous editor.

Mr. Wright, in a letter to the Wells & Richardson Co., says:

"I have used Paine's celery compound with marked beneficial results. As a nerve tonic and sleep promoter I consider it far ahead of anything in the market today. It has certainly been of great assistance to me when tired and overworked."

Mental strain demands nourishment. It is for this that so many eminent lawyers, active politicians, journalists, hard-headed business men, church men, children and their mothers take Paine's celery compound.

There is no question about its virtue. Physicians have long prescribed it; year in and year out testimonials by hundreds have been accumulating, so that an intelligent man knows what he is taking, and what the results have been in cases just like his own.

A Woman's Back.

The mainspring of her life.

What can she do, where can she go, so long as that deadly backache saps both strength and ambition?

She cannot walk, she cannot stand; her duties are burdensome; she is miserable.

The cause is some derangement of the uterus or womb. Backache is the sure symptom.

The one unfailing remedy is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A woman discovered it and gave it to woman. Mrs. T. W. Lane, of Holyoke, Mass., tells what a comfort it is to write to a woman about her peculiar troubles, and have a woman read her letters and give a woman's sympathy and help. Thousands send Mrs. Pinkham letters, grateful for renewed life.

A JOLLY PARTY.

This morning about 10 o'clock there passed through Fort Wayne over the Nickel Plate road a special train bearing a jolly party of 170 excursionists. They were the members of the Independent New York City German Shooting club. The excursionists, who were accompanied by their wives and daughters, occupied five elegant coaches and were bound for Chicago to see the sights and attend the Columbian shoot, which comes off on Sunday.

The train was in charge of Conductor Driver. Many of the party took lunch with Bert Connelly, of the Nickel Plate restaurant. A SENTINEL reporter looked into the baggage car and discovered numerous baskets of champagne, cases of wine and boxes of cigars. The captain of the club is Wm. V. Weber, of New York city. All the members of the association are wealthy New York city merchants and are crack shots. They expect to remain at the fair for a week and carry off some of the prizes.

THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

To Celebrate the Fourth You Must Have Fireworks,

And the Sportsmen's Emporium Is the Place to Buy Them—Largest Stock in the City.

In a few days the greatest national holiday on the calendar, the Fourth of July, with all its attendant noise and smell of burned powder will be here.

Every patriotic American will celebrate the day in a fitting manner, and the boom of the cannon and the display of the pyrotechnics this year will be louder and more beautiful than on any previous Fourth.

The Sportsmen's Emporium, under the able management of Mr. Fred Borneman, at No. 58 East Main street, has this year a larger and better assortment of Fourth of July goods than ever before. The spacious emporium is chucked full of everything in the fireworks line. They have vertical wheels in all sizes and at all prices, triangles and rockets till you can't rest. There are parachute rockets, weeping willow rockets, and a dozen other varieties. Then there are "Mines of Saucisons," something entirely new—boquet bombs, star batteries, flower pots and rosettes, also a new article on the market for the first time this year—lady crackers, colored fires, salutes, Roman candles by the thousand, blue lights, pin wheels, torpedoes, giant crackers and fire crackers by the million. The Emporium has also a large stock of extra large blank cartridges made especially for them, while their line of flags and decorations is endless.

Especial attention is given to out of town or mail orders, and parties ordering from a distance can rest assured that their orders will be promptly filled. Call and make your selection from the largest stock in Indiana and have the goods delivered at any time. The Sportsmen's Emporium, wholesale and retail fireworks, No 58 East Main street, Fred Borneman, manager.

The Nation Celebrates at the Fair.

The plans for the great World's Fair 4th of July celebration have been made upon a scale which has never been surpassed. Fort Wayne always comes to the front in patriotism and doubtless hundreds of our citizens will join in the great celebration. There will be an excursion from this city to Chicago the 3d and 5th, inclusive, giving an opportunity of witnessing the magnificent display of fireworks in the evening. As it will be difficult to engage lodging at a moment's notice and to get from the fair to the center of the city after the celebration, we would advise our readers to engage rooms at the World's Inn, on Midway Plaisance, opposite the fair entrance. 800 rooms; fire proof; rates, $1.50 and up. Good restaurant attached. Address Chas. E. Leland, Mgr. 60th St. and Madison Ave. Chicago.

Nearly everybody eats Ice Cream on the Fourth of July, but not everybody stops to think what mischief poor Ice Cream will do in hot weather. The question often asked is why do we hear of sickness resulting from eating Ice Cream, especially from country towns and picnics, where pure cream should be plenty. The trouble is not so much with the cream used but the way Ice Cream is made in these small towns. Small dealers in country towns, when making Ice Cream for a picnic, or for the Fourth of July, will, owing to small freezing capacity, commence freezing cream three or four days ahead and store it in the cans, and right here is where the mischief is going on. There is constant danger of generating lactic acid, and the formation of verdigris. Serious sicknesses and even deaths have occurred from these sources. The only advice we can give, to avoid danger, is to buy your Ice Cream of home dealers. Fort Wayne has a number of first class Ice Cream manufacturers. The Chicago Bakery, on Broadway, has a freezing capacity of 500 gallons per day, but not more is manufactured than to supply each days demand.
